Hints for your workspace comfort

Assess your work space to ensure that both your keyboard and keyboard are within easy reach and you are not over extending or excessively reaching so that it may cause discomfort to your body. If anything you are doing causes you discomfort, stop.

Have the keyboard straight in front of you¹

Place your keyboard in front of you when typing. Leave a gap of about 4 to 6 inches (100mm-150mm) at the front of the desk to rest your wrists between bouts of typing.

Keep your arms bent in an L-shape and your elbows by your sides.

Some people like to use a wrist rest to keep their wrists straight and at the same level as the keys.

Keep your mouse close¹

When using the mouse it is best that it is as close to you as possible. Suggest using a mouse mat with a wrist pad as this will avoid awkward bending and may help keep your wrist straight. If you're not using your keyboard, move it to the side and position the mouse closer to you.

Take regular breaks

Preferably it is best not to sit in the same position for too long. Ensure you change your posture as often as is practicable. Frequent short breaks are better for your back than fewer long ones. It gives the muscles a chance to relax while others take the strain.
